Cities of the Red Night follows a dual narrative, slipping fluidly between the early 18th century exploits of a libertarian pirate crew, led by gunsmith Noah Blake, and the late 20th century “private asshole” (Clem Snide) hired to find the decapitated remains of one Jerry Green -- victim apparent of a bizarre hanging/sex cult.

Another pandemic-inspired reread was William S. Burroughs's Cities of the Red Night, which I hadn't picked up since high school and read this time for the novelty of the viral plague. Hindsight says that my giddy anticipation at rereading this “prescient” book was unnecessary, but it seemed like a good enough excuse to read Burroughs.

~~The Millions: Cities of the Red Night by William Burroughs~~

Perhaps Burroughs' finest novel after Naked Lunch, Cities of the Red Night intercuts a detective novel plot with scenes in the ill-fated pirate colony of Captain Mission on Madagascar with acerbic wit and visionary imagery. The proof bears on its cover and title page a darkly ironic subtitle, “A Boy's Book”, not present in the published book.

"Cities of the Red Night" is perpetually climaxing. Whereas, for other authors, it might prove a diverting or comical (unwritten) pastime to imagine what it might be like if all of their characters--from every time and space--were to meet over drinks, Burroughs can't seem to resist transporting his entire cast into hallucinatory, ritualistic ...

Burroughs' "Cities of the Red Night" is a feverish glimpse into alternate histories, the end of the world, new forms of government, viral mutations, bizarre slants on ethnicity and the to-be-expected preoccupation with hard drugs and wild sex. Prose style gyrates from first-person hard-boiled sleuth to all-too-believable boardroom monotone.

This first volume of the final #Burroughs trilogy, "Red Night" has captured me firmly in its grasp. The weaving of several simultaneous threads which the reader must unravel in "Cities of the Red Night," illustrates and embodies the instructions given by the author on constructing a virus in "Electronic Revolution."

The Cities of the Red Night were six in number: Tamaghis, Ba'dan, Yass-Waddah, Waghdas, Naufana, and Ghadis. These cities were located in an area roughly corresponding to the Gobi Desert, a hundred thousand years ago. At that time the desert was dotted with large oases and traversed by a river which emptied into the Caspian Sea.
