Lifelong learning is important because it helps us to develop as humans. While many theorists once believed that human development peaks at age 20-25, we increasingly understand the importance of learning to help us develop into our old age. We might call learning in older ages the ' getting of wisdom ' .

The Centre for Lifelong Learning (CLL) has been offering classes to adults for almost 40 years and prides itself on providing learning which meets the needs of its diverse student community. At this unprecedented time, we are committed to keeping our students engaged with their learning and each other. To this end we have moved all teaching online until such time as social distancing permits us to return to CLL.
